30 November 2023

LOW TIDE / HIGH FIVES

Snowmobile conditions in Golden BC remain in a pre-season, low-tide situation however, if you need to get out there and breath some mountain air, it's more than possible to have a good enough day to throw a high five to a buddy. The good news is that there is at least 24cms of snow in the 5 day forecast and hopefully more after that; when enough comes, we're ready to start track packing! Quartz Creek is a still a reliable zone to get a day in the mountains; it's not amazing by normal standards but it comes down to how bad do you need a day out? The views are as majestic as always and it's a good time to blow the dust off the gear and get your systems back in order. Those first stucks of the year can get the heart rate going like no stationary bike in the gym can so it's good to get the blood flowing.

Snow & Weather

SNOW AND WEATHER

The ridable snow up in Quartz is pretty thin. There hasn't been a significant snowfall for 3 weeks. What's there is at least settled and is offering a supportive base, but we need more snow, to say the least. There's 50-60cms of compacted snow in the alpine bowls at Quartz.

61 cms of settled snow in Quartz alpine on Nov 27

Roly Poly area in Quartz on Nov 27

Creek crossing on way in to Quartz on Nov 27

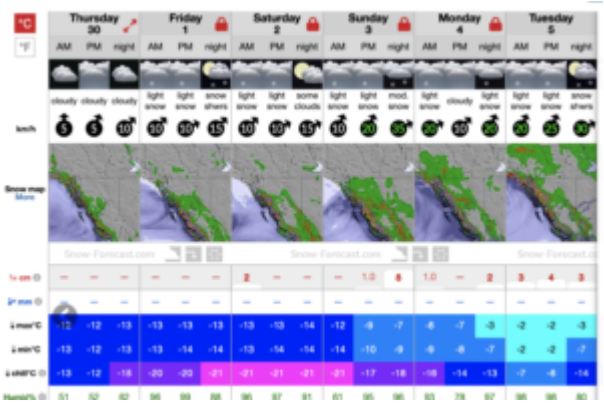

Sledding from the parking lot at Quartz is good to go.

Trail in to Quartz cabin is a bit whooped.

Committing to the turn on Nov 27

5 day mid-mountain forecast for Quartz on Nov 27